Human Breeding - The Elephant in the Room. Whether we like it or not, and I suspect most won't, we can only be a percentage of our father and a percentage of our Mother. We cannot possible be anything else. If we'd had a different mother or father we would have different looks and personality - a different person. Once the sperm meets the egg our fate is set and our basic personality and character is triggered. We would like to believe that we are true individuals but this is an impossibility as we inherit our emotions from our parents, as is now generally accepted. These emotions will strengthen or weaken depending on the environment we are raised in. If we are raised in an aggressive environment and we have inherited an aggressive attitude from our parent/s (which is likely) we will have difficulty in controlling this emotion. 'Breeding', as regards to humans, is not a word you hear very often these days except perhaps in old films about the British Empire, for example. We usually use the word to refer to race horses or show dogs, but we not only breed these animals for speed, say, or colour or looks but also for temperament (emotions). If we wanted a viscous guard dog we would breed a viscous bitch with a viscous dog. So why do we find it difficult to accept 'human breeding' - for want of a better word. It could be argued, perhaps, that animal breeding could be an intentional mating, whereas human mating comes down to sexual attraction. One person may find another person of the opposite sex attractive (emotion) and another person might not. I won't attempt to answer that one - some say that opposites attract and others that 'birds of the feather flock together'. It's often stated that a person is a natural at such and such a thing - by studying the parents or even the grandparents of the person the strength can be explained. Feelings can only be inherited, we are not taught how to feel, they are in-built, we are only taught what to call them and how to control them by our parents, grandparents etc. (hopefully). As stated this gives us our personality/character. It makes logical sense that if someone suffering from 'psychological problems' (emotional problems) is taught that his problems are inherited and that he/she must learn how to control them with an independent mind they would understand themselves better and respond to treatment quicker. We have an independent mind that has to control the 'poor' emotions that we have. An independent mind that will find it very difficult to control emotions without positive thinking. But knowing that there is a conflict between what we feel and what we want to feel or think, can, I believe, greatly help everyone - understanding where the poor emotions/feelings come from. It's no good, of course, blaming our parents because they have inherited these emotions themselves! We obviously inherit good emotions also.

Practical Dog Breeding: Principles & Practice Dogwise Publishing

In what promises to become an "Omnivore's Dilemma" for dog lovers—breed devotees and adoption advocates alike—The Dog Merchants is the first book to explain the complex and often surprisingly similar business practices that extend from the American Kennel Club to local shelters, from Westminster champions to dog auctions. Without judging dog lovers of any stripe, The Dog Merchants makes it clear that money spent among these dog merchants has real-world effects on people and canines. Kavin reveals how dog merchants create markets for dogs, often in defiance of the usual rules of supply and demand. She takes an investigative approach and meets breeders and rescuers at all levels, shedding much-needed light on an industry that most people don't even realize is an industry. Kavin's goal is to advance the conversation about how all dogs are treated, from puppy mills to high-kill shelters. She shows that a great deal can be improved by understanding the business practices behind selling dogs of all kinds. Instead of pitting rescue and purebred people against each other, The Dog Merchants shows how all dog lovers can come together, with one voice as consumers, on behalf of all our beloved companions.

From two of the world's leading authorities on dogs, an imaginative journey into a future of dogs without people. What would happen to dogs if humans simply disappeared? Would dogs be able to survive on their own without us? A Dog's World imagines a posthuman future for dogs, revealing how dogs would survive—and possibly even thrive—and explaining how this new and revolutionary perspective can guide how we interact with dogs now. Drawing on biology, ecology, and the latest findings on the lives and behavior of dogs and their wild relatives, Jessica Pierce and Marc Bekoff—two of today's most innovative thinkers about dogs—explore who dogs might become without direct human intervention into breeding, arranged playdates at the dog park, regular feedings, and veterinary care. Pierce and Bekoff show how dogs are quick learners who are highly adaptable and opportunistic, and they offer compelling evidence that dogs already do survive on their own—and could do so in a world without us. Challenging the notion that dogs would be helpless without their human counterparts, A Dog's World enables us to understand these independent and remarkably intelligent animals on their own terms.

On days out to the beach, always be the first in the family to get out of the car, onto the beach and into the sea. Always be the last in the family to get out of the sea, onto the beach and into the car. Remember to shake excess sea water from your fur once you are inside the car. Humans may refrain from passing you food to test. To them, a piece of salmon, followed by Liquorice Allsorts, a chocolate cake, and a selection of vegetables is a foul combination. Humans believe meals should be categorised into three sections. A starter, a main course and a sweet. Disavow them of this. Food is food is food. Always make sure you have more energy at the end of a walk, than you did at the beginning. Believe me, humans love the futility of taking you for a walk to tire you out.
